Maureen: Jeff, have you seen this ad in the ESL Newsletter?

Jeff: Yes, I saw it. But I'm not interested in finding a new job. I've been here since I finished my Ph. D. I like working here.

Maureen: Really? I've only been here for two years, and I'm already tired of doing the same thing every day. I'm afraid of getting really bored.

Jeff: Oh, come on! It's not that bad. You'll do the same thing there every day.

Maureen: But the salaries are good.

Jeff: I'm not interested in making more money. I have enough now.

Maureen: I can never have enough. Of course you live at home with your parents.

Jeff: I like living with my parents. What's wrong with that?

Maureen: Nothing. But I like being independent. I like traveling. I enjoy meeting new people. I'm going to apply for the job.

Jeff: Well, good luck!

Waitress: Hurry up, Chef! I have 12 customers, and they all want today’s special.

Some of them have been waiting for 15 minutes.

Chef: I know, I know, but I have only two hands. You’ll have to help me.

Waitress: Help you? That’s not my job. I’m a waitress, not a cook.

Chef: Well, one of my assistants is off today, and the other is sick.

Waitress: Oh, O.K. What do I do first?

Chef: Well, start putting the meat on the plates and I’ll finish these vegetables.

Waitress: Ok. Is that enough meat?

Chef: Hmm. That’s a little too much. Take some off.

Waitress: What about potatoes?

Chef: Oh, put on lots of potatoes—they’re cheap—and plenty of peas.

Waitress: All right. Can I take them out now?

Chef: Fine. Now you can begin taking the plates out to the customers.

Waitress: Whew! They’re hot!

Chef: Well, use a dish towel. And don’t carry too many plates. You might drop them.

Waitress: Oh, I won’t drop them. I’ve never dropped a plate in my life! (Crash!) Oh, no!

(All of the plates on the waitress’s hands fell and were all broken into pieces.)
