五、閱讀測驗 (每題 2 分, 共 6 分)

We count with numbers today. The decimal system we use is very easy. But not every culture has counted the same way. Many systems are different. In ancient Rome, the Romans used Roman numerals. But these were not actually numerals. Instead, they were letters.

The Romans used the letters I, V, X, L, C, D, and M to stand for certain quantities. For example, I was 1, V was 5, X was 10, L was 50, C was 100, D was 500, and M was 1,000. To make larger numbers, they just added more letters. So 2 was II, and 3 was III, 6 was VI, and 7 was VII. However, the number 4 was not IIII. Instead, it was IV. Why did they do that? When a letter was going to change to one with a greater value, the Romans put the smaller letter in front of the bigger letter. That meant they should abstract that amount, not add to it. So 9 was IX. 40 was XL. 90 was XC. And 900 was CM.

Doing that was not difficult. But Romans could not count very high since it was hard to write large numbers. For example, what was 3,867? In Roman numerals, it was MMMDCCCLXVII. How about doing addition, subtraction, multiplication, or division? Can you imagine dividing MMCCXII by CCLXIV?

	decimal	十進位	quantity	數量	abstract	提取	addition	加法
value	價值	subtraction	減法	multiplication	乘法	division	除

People make trash everywhere as well as in space. When spacemen take a long trip to 29 planet, they also have to face a trash problem. It is always an important job for NASA scientists to think about dealing with the problems because it cost them a lot of money to recycle the trash. If they produce too much garbage and send it into space, more satellites 30 out of order. The good news is that Tethers Unlimited, Inc. in the USA 31 a new way to fix the problem.

Tethers made a new system. The system joins a waste recycling machine and a 3D printer together. And it can help the spacemen 32. Once they put the plastic waste into the recycling machine, Positrusion the machine will turn the waste into 3D printer filament. The filament is one part of Refabricator, the 3D printer. With it, spacemen can make more spaceship parts for space study.

33 into new useful tools will also help NASA save money because spacemen can make something useful from the trash. They don't need to buy them. Tethers already tested the new system successfully on the Earth. Perhaps the spacemen will make use of the system and not longer have trouble dealing with the garbage problem in the future.
